My overall experience at STRIVE was an educational experience. I was introduced to a lot of different personalities some I enjoyed and some I had to use self control. Those different personalities helped me to be able to ignore certain things and bite my tongue in the work place, especially if it's aggravating and could potentially cause problems. I've learned things the very first day like; the importance of first impression. You have to carry yourself a certain way if you want to be taken seriously or even considered for the job. I've seen people with all kind of problems and from all walks of life come in to STRIVE and have jobs, so that helped me knock down my personal barrier. But most importantly she's shown us how to market ourselves on the application and the interview. So now graduating from STRIVE I feel confident that I will succeed in the work field.
