My experience with Strive was an experience that I truly believe would last me a lifetime. I was truly enlightened. I learned things that you would think ~~we~~ <sup>I</sup> should already know. My first week there I was a bit unsure I didn't feel like I belonged but my need for the help held me there, thank God I stayed because it taught me new words, it taught me the importance of dressing proper, filling out applications properly, working together with others, following directions, sleeping, saying yes instead of yeah, using proper language, how to sit, finding information etc, the list can go on and on, but my experiences with Strive was exciting at times mainly because of the learning of things new to me, it was also heart breaking, ego shattering, depressing. It was an experience like I said from the beginning I believe it's going to last me a lifetime, I just hope and pray that everyone could experience what Strive offers. Just the experience of knowing and seeing on a daily basis how the entire staff truly cares for each person who attends. Their serious about what they do, the love is real the concern is real and the things they offer and teach is real, it's people helping people to a high degree and I thank them all with all my heart. It works if you work it so work it.
