

My Experience at Strive Was

Like going to Independent Living again for the first time. It was exciting, exhilarating and enjoyable to be around so many people who were strangers but became a family of learning individuals together, we learned so much about ourselves personal and professional, our cultures, personal and professional and even our spiritual selves, we learned that if you need help it's ok to ask for it. but humility is a great asset to have, I realized that I truly have so much to offer many jobs and companies not just security. I learned that even with little payed experience but much personal experience is just as good and can take you very far all, you need are the tools and knowledge to get you there. I learned that getting liked is a key factor in getting and keeping a job that a application and resume states 2 different things application is a legally binding contract or document resume just tells your experiences.

I learned that selling yourself is key to getting that job you want, and your commercial needs to be booming like you see on tv. Selling yourself as you would sell a product you would want others to buy. If the sale is successful you will be successful in your search. When that employer asks you tell me a little bit about your self are you ready to blow them away with your commercial all about you? I am! When they ask why should I hire you will you be able to tell them? I will! I now know what it takes to land that career and keep it. I now know what it truly means to
